In her practice, Patria Lohvinski handles a wide range of cases in complex litigation defense, assisting clients facing claims in products liability, pharmaceutical, and environmental exposure matters. Her work focuses on assisting with witness preparation, written discovery strategies, and expert vetting in cases involving personal injury allegedly resulting from exposure to drug products or certain chemicals, including agricultural chemicals and ethylene oxide.

Patria is deeply engaged in all phases of litigation, with a particular passion for the discovery process. She enjoys analyzing large volumes of documents to uncover facts that support compelling legal arguments—or dismantle those of opposing parties. She has significant experience managing eDiscovery issues, drafting affirmative and responding to written discovery, preparing deposition outlines, second-chairing depositions, and supporting trial teams. Patria has also led teams responsible for drafting and filing high volumes of responsive pleadings in multidistrict litigation. She regularly contributes to the preparation of briefs, dispositive motions, and other critical filings.

In addition to her litigation practice, Patria has handled numerous pro bono matters with a focus on immigration law, assisting clients through complex asylum proceedings. Her native Spanish fluency plays a vital role in building trust and ensuring clear, effective communication with clients throughout the representation.
